

Windmills (Drama) by Kenya D. Williamson

Logline: All Kate Morrow wants is to play music and get married. But, not wanting to be alone is keeping Kate in a dead-end relationship that might only end with her death.

Synopsis: Kate's memories of her father are fuzzy, at best. Her parents argued. He left. And she's been waiting for his return ever since. But, while Kate's chances for a reunion grow slimmer with every passing year, she decides if he won't come to her, she'll go to him.

Tracking down a little-known traveling musician isn't easy, but neither is walking down the aisle alone. Alex might not be perfect. But, he's the man Kate wants to marry. Even when he's jealous and angry, Kate knows he still loves her. And even when she hears the rumors, she knows he's still faithful...or at least, she used to.

The safe haven her mother created can't protect Kate as her memories return and her lover betrays her. And while Kate chooses reality over long-held fantasies, she must not only survive the violent consequences, but defend the people who stood beside her, all along.